Carmelite of Stamford.

Burley John d 1333

A Carmelite of Stamford, whom Heland mentions only in order to distinguish him from the better known Walter Burley. Pitto, possibly confusing him with Walter, attributes to him commentaries on Porphyry, Aristotle, and Peter Lombard, and says that he opposed the division of his order in England into provinces, a division which was carried out. His name is not given in the Bibliotheca Carmelitana.

Burley, Walter (1275-1345?), commentator on Aristotle, was born in the year 1274 or 1275 (Todd, Catalogue of Lambeth MSS., No 143). It seems more probable that he was as Bell states, a secular priest than a Franciscan, as the 'Bibliotheca Universalis Franciscana' and Pass Mullinger assert him to have been, or an Augustinian as Gandolphus reports on the authority of Burley's contemporary, Alphonso Vargas, Archbishop of Seville. For Ireland (Collectanea III 54) gives his name among the list of the fellows of Merton in the days of Edward I; and there are reasons for believing him to have been a beneficed priest in the later years of his life.

According to Holinshed, Walter Burley was a kinsman of Sir Simon Burley [q.v.], and hence was a member of the Herefordshire family of that name. He studied at Merton College, Oxford, whence he removed to Paris, where he had William of Ockham for a fellow student and Denis Scotus for a teacher. Denis is generally supposed to have been in Paris from 1304 to 1307 (C. Werner, Die Scholastik).

which renders it very probable that the Walter Burley whose name occurs as prebendary of Shalford in the diocese of Wells when Richard de Bury held this deanery (1332) was the Aristotelian commentator (he Nave II 151, 199).

P. 955 The Earl of Northumberland Lord High Admiral of the fleet was dismissed by the King in 1642. As soon as this news came abroad the Two Houses met and appointed Earl of Warwick who had been second in command in his stead, the Earl of Northumberland not wishing to go against the desires of the King.

"The Earl of Warwick, being thus armed, found himself master of his work; and immediately summoned all the Captains, to attend him on board his ship in council; the which all but two did, (Captain Strongbow & Captain Wake,) who, being by his majesty's letters, as the rest were, expressly charged to yield no further obedience to the Earl of Warwick, refused to repair to him; making themselves ready to resist any violence, and putting their ships in order to go out to sea, that they might be at liberty to attend his majesty's commands: but they were so encompassed by the whole fleet, and the dexterity of the Earl's ministers was such, and the devotion, generally, of the seamen so tainted, and corrupted to the King's service, that, instead of carrying away the ships, the captains themselves were seized, taken, and carried by their own men to the Earl; who immediately committed them to custody, and sent them up prisoners to the parliament. Then his lordship communicated the ordinance, letters, and votes from the two houses to the rest of the officers; of whom only two more refused to continue their charge against the signification they had received from the King (Sir John Memmes and Captain Burley,) who were quickly discharged, and set on shore; the rest, without any scruple or hesitation, "obliged themselves to obey the Earl of Warwick, in the service of the Parliament;" so that the storm was now over, and the Parliament fully and entirely possessed of the whole Royal Navy, and militia by sea; for they quickly disposed of two other honest Captains, Kettleby and Staddon, (whom they could not corrupt,) who guarded the Irish seas; and got those ships likewise into their service. And thus his Majesty was without one ship of his own, in his three Kingdoms, at his devotion."

Vol V

P. 2197 The king (Charles I) had been taken to Carisbrooke Castle, Isle of Wight. While he was there a deputation from Parliament presented him with four bills to which he was asked to agree and reply to. He refused because an affirmation would mean that he had given up his kingship. The deputation departed.

"The commissioners ~~had~~ were no sooner gone than Col. Hammond (apparently in charge of castle?) caused all the king's servants, who till then had all liberty to be with him, to be immediately put out of the castle; and forbade any of them to repair thither any more; and appointed a strong guard to restrain any body from going to the king, if they should endeavour it. This exceedingly troubled and surprised him, being an absolute disappointment of all the hope he had left. He told Hammond, that it was not suitable to his engagement, and that it did not become a man of honour or honesty to treat him so, who had so freely put himself into his hands. He asked him, whether the commissioners were acquainted with his purpose to proceed in this manner? To which he answered, that they were not; but that he had an order from the Parliament to do as he had done; and that, he saw plainly by his answer to the propositions, that he acted by other counsels than stood with the good of the Kingdom."

This insolent and imperious proceeding put the whole island (which was generally inhabited by a people always well affected to the crown) into a high mutiny. They said, "they would not endure to see the King so used, and made a prisoner." There was at that time there one Captain Burby, who was of a good family in the island. He had been a captain of one of the King's ships, and was put out of his command ((Antelope?)) when the fleet rebelled against the King; and then he put himself into the King's army, where he continued an officer of good account to the end of the war, and was ^{or} one of the King's armies General of the Ordnance. When the war was at an end, he repaired to his own country, the Isle of Wight; where many of his family still lived in good reputation. This gentleman chanced to be at Newport, the chief town in the island, when the King was thus treated, and when the people seemed generally to resent it with so much indignation; and was so much transported with the same fury, being a man of more courage than of prudence and circumspection, that he caused a drum to be presently beaten, and put himself at the head of the people who flocked together, and cried, "for God, the King, and the people;" and said,

"He would lead them to the castle, and rescue the king from his captivity." The attempt was presently discerned to be irrational and impossible; and by the great diligence and activity of the king's servants, who had been put out of the castle, the people were quieted, and all men resorted to their own houses; but the poor gentleman paid dear for his ill-advised and precipitate loyalty. For Hammond caused him presently to be made prisoner; and the parliament, without delay, sent down a commission of Oyer and Terminer; in which an infamous judge, Weld, whom they had made chief baron of the exchequer for such services, presided; who caused poor Burley to be, with all formality, indicted of high treason for levying war against the king, and engaging the kingdom in a new war; of which the jury they had brought together, found him guilty; upon which their judge condemned him, and the honest man was forthwith hanged, drawn, and quartered, with ~~all the~~ ^{all the} circumstances of barbarity and cruelty; which struck a wonderful terror into all men, this being the first precedent of their having brought any man to a formal legal trial by the law to deprive him of his life, and make him guilty of high treason for adhering to the king; and it made a deeper impression upon the hearts of all men, than all the cruelties they had yet exercised by their courts of war; which, though they took away the lives of many innocent men, left their estates to their wives and children; but when they saw now, that they might be condemned of high treason before a sworn judge of the law for serving the king, by which their estates would be likewise confiscated, they thought they should be justified if they kept their hearts entire, without being involved by their actions in a capital transgression.

In the Isle of Wight itself (seat of strong royalist faction), Captain Burley, a half-pay naval officer, had the drum beat through the streets of Newport, and, collecting a body of laborers, children, & women put himself at their head to go and release the king from prison. The attempt was immediately frustrated, & Burley hanged as guilty of having made war against the king in his parliament (Clarendon iii, 137).

Similar feelings & desires agitated those countries which, just before, had been opposed to the royal cause; even at the very doors of parliament, some of Essex's disbanded soldiers tumultuously assembled crying, "God save the king!" stopping coaches & making those within join them in drinking his health.

Burley or Burleigh John, d 1648.

Royalist captain, belonged according to Clarendon, to a good family in the Isle of Wight. In a list of his Majesties Navy Royall and Merchant Ships in 1642 (Peacock, Army Lists of the Roundheads and Cavaliers p. 61) his name appears as captain of the Antelope. Clarendon states that being put out of his command when the fleet rebelled against the king he joined the army, in which he became a general of ordnance. At the end of the war he took up his residence in the Isle of Wight, and, unable to control his indignation when the King entered Newport a prisoner, he caused a drum to be beaten, to gather a force to rescue him from the castle. The attempt was so quixotic as scarcely to deserve any severer punishment than ridicule; but in such a serious light was it regarded by the parliament that a special commission of oyer and terminer was sent to try him at Winchester, by whom he was found guilty of high treason and condemned to death. He was accordingly executed 15 Feb. 1647-8

- P. 167 It has been stated that Sir Simon Burley had been sent with proposals to the Emperor of Germany respecting the marriage of the lady Anne, his sister, with King Richard of England. The gallant knight transacted this business with so much ability, that the emperor & his council consented, & the Duke of Saxony, one of the council, was sent over to England to make inquiry respecting the queen's settlement.

P. 292. When a French invasion threatened Sir Henry + Sir Faulx Percy were sent to defend Yarmouth + Sir Simon Burley was appointed Governor of Dover Castle.

P. 300. Sir Simon Burley aided in collection of taxes for the defence of the country.

Sir Simon Burley was governor of Dover Castle, & from his situation received frequently intelligence from France, by means of the fishermen of the town. They informed him that the King of France was certainly determined on the invasion; that he intended to land one division at or near Dover, and another at Sandwich; and that his forces were immense. He, as well as the rest of England, believed that all this was true; and one day he set out for Canterbury, to visit the abbey + Christ church, which was very near. The abbot inquired, "what news?" When Sir Simon told him all he had heard, adding, that the shrine of St. Thomas, so respectable + rich, was not safe in Canterbury; and if the French came, some of the pillagers would no doubt carry it off. I advise you to have it carried for safety to Dover Castle". The abbot + all the convent were so much enraged at this speech that they replied, "How Sir Simon, would you wish to dispoil this church of its jewel? If you are afraid yourself, you can shut yourself up in your castle of Dover; however, the French will not be bold enough to adventure so far. But Sir Simon persisted so long in his proposition, that the common people grew discontented, and held him for an ill-inclined person.

P. 326. You may be sure the Duke of Ireland & Sir Simon Burley will be there also. (Sir Simon was at this time holding a high office in the administration of the King).

P. 327. A commission was appointed to look into the way in which the tax money had been handled. Sir Simon Burley was charged with defalcation to the amount of 250,000 francs. (Sir Simon Burley had been tutor to the King, and had assisted him in the government ever since he came to the throne). When called upon to give an account of it, he cast the blame on the Archbishop of York, Sir Wm. Neville & others, saying that he had never acted but with them and by their advice; but these when examined, excused themselves and flung the whole fault back again upon him. The Duke of Ireland said to Sir Simon privately, "I understand you are to be arrested & sent to prison until you shall pay the sum with which you are charged. Don't dispute the matter, but go whither they may order. I will make your peace with the King." Sir Simon Burley put too much confidence in these words of the Duke of Ireland; and when condemned went quietly to the Tower. Many, when he was in prison, came forward against him: indeed, he was so overpowered, that nothing he could say in his defence availed; and after a short delay, he was carried forth from the Tower and beheaded as a traitor, in the square before it.

Notwithstanding I thus relate the disgraceful death of Sir Simon Burley, which I am forced to do by my determination to insert nothing but the truth in this history, I was exceedingly vexed thereat, and personally much grieved; for in my youth I found him a gentle knight, and of great good sense. The accounts of others were also examined.

When King Richard, who was in Wales, heard of the death of Sir Simon Burley, he was very wroth, & swore it should not remain unrevenge'd, for it was an act of cruelty, & without the smallest plea of justice. The Queen also bewailed his loss; for he had been the principal promoter of her marriage, and had conducted her from Germany to England.

In like manner, as the king's uncles & the new council were devising means of reforming abuses in the government, & of having the king & realm under their power, the Duke of Ireland & his council were plotting day & night how they could keep their places & destroy those who opposed them.

P. 335 The marshals, Sir Thos. Moreland & Sir Richard Burley declared the castle of Noya to be impregnable.

P. 461. The Duke of Gloucester, from both his power as noble & his rough manner was more dreaded by the king than any other of his uncles; through his influence many severe & hasty executions had taken place - that gallant & prudent knight, Sir Simon Burley, was beheaded.

Burley, John (d. 1355), a baronile of Stamford, whomeland mentions only in order to distinguish him from the better known Walter Burley. Burley, Sir Simon (1336-88), warrior and favourite, was born in 1336 (Nicolas, Scrope & Grosvenor p. 206) of a Herefordshire family. His parentage is uncertain, but he appears to have been a younger brother rather than a son of the Sir John Burley who received the Garter at the accession of Richard II. Introduced into court by his relative Walter Burley (q.v.), he first served in the fleet which destroyed the Spanish corsair in 1350. In 1355 he took part in Edward's abortive expedition from Calais, and in 1364 he appears in attendance on the Black Prince in Aquitaine. By him he was sent on the embassy to Pedro of Castile in 1366, and shared in his restoration and the victory of Najera in 1367 (Froissart). On the war being renewed in 1369, he was attacked near Lusignan, when with a detached force, and made prisoner by the French, to the grief of the Black Prince, who had a high esteem for him (ib.). On the release of the Duchess of Bourbon he was exchanged (1370) and rejoined the Black Prince at Limoges. To him chiefly the prince bequeathed the education of his son Richard, on whose accession Burley at once obtained promotion and power. He came to London as the young king's envoy, and bore the sword before him on the occasion of his visiting the city (Wals. i. 330, 331). He was also made governor of Windsor Castle, and obtained grants of lands (Rot. Vase i Ric. II, m. 15; Pat. 2 Ric. II p. 1, m. 42). He was made master of the King's falcons at 'the Meirs', constable of Guildford and Wignore, and was given a residence in Thames Street by Baynard's Castle (Stow, Annals). On 12 June 1380 (Foedera), the king being then fourteen, he was chosen as his tutor, and, being a skilful negotiator (Froissart), as one of the commissioners to treat for his marriage, being then styled 'knight of the king's chamber' (Foedera). Six months later he was definitely appointed to negotiate for the hand of Anne of Bohemia (ib.). He went to her at Prague, and having obtained her consent (20 Feb 1381), and concluded a treaty with her uncle, Wenceslaus of Bohemia, returned successful to England, and was awarded with the Garter 28 May 1381. These dates dispose of Stow's assertion (Annals, p. 284) that he was guilty of encouraging the Wat Tyler rising (January 1381). He was then despatched again to escort her to England as an attendant of the household, 'travelling with a great equipage' (Froissart). He brought her from Brussels to Calais, whence they crossed in December (Issue Rolls, Mich. 5, Ric. II, 21 Dec.). Froissart says that he had urged the Flemish as against the Hanseatic nation on Richard, and he thus became an ally of the queen. He was present at the reception of the Flemish messengers by Richard in 1382 (Froissart), and on 24 Jan. 1383 he was appointed constable of Dover and warden of the Cinque Ports. He took part in the Scottish campaign of 1385, at the head of twenty men-at-arms and thirty archers (Archaeologia), and clung to Richard's cause when assailed in 1386. At the close of that year he was rewarded by being chosen as one of Richard's advisors in his struggle for absolute power. At the same time (30 Dec. 1386) he appeared as a witness in the Beaufort and Grosvenor controversy. The Earl of Arundel acquiring popularity by a naval victory this year, Beaufort opposed him with special jealousy (Wals. II 156). At the approach of the reaction (November 1387) he was inclined to flee, but having been persuaded by De Vere to stand firm (Froissart) was seized and sent to Nottingham Castle (Knighton, 2703; Issue Rolls 20 Dec. 1387), whence he was brought to London to be impeached by the commons, with three other knights (12 March 1388). The indictment printed in 'Rot. Parl.' III 241-3, accuses him of sundry misuses of power, but the article on which he was convicted was the eighth, charging him with leading Richard in his youth to form a corrupt court. Froissart contends that malversation was the plea on which he was ruined; but this would seem to apply to previous complaints. He was accused of having raised his income from 20 marks to 3,000 in a few years (Knighton, 2727), and was even suspected by the people of wishing to sell Dover to the French (Wals. II 174). Berby was anxious to save his life, but was overruled by Gloucester and Arundel (ib), the latter of whom was bent on his death, and even insulted the queen when she pleaded on her knees for him (Chronique), as he was reminded by Richard in 1397. Gloucester also insisted "if he wished to be king, Berby must suffer" (Rot. Parl. III 431). He was accordingly sentenced in parliament, 5 May 1388, to be hanged, drawn, and quartered, which was commuted by the king, on the plea of his services, to beheading. He suffered the same day on Tower Hill (ib III 243), Stow asserting that he was first led through the city, his hands bound behind him (Chron. p. 204). His sentence was formally reversed 22 March 1399. The king and queen were enraged at his death and Froissart grieved ~~and was~~ for him as a friend and as a wise and gentle knight. It is probable, from a list of his books, twenty-one in number, extracted from an inventory of his goods (8 Nov. 1387) 'at the Newes and Baynard's castle,' and preserved in manuscript (Add MS 25459, p. 206), that he was a man of some culture. His taste for romances of chivalry accounts for his intimacy with Froissart, and suggests that his ideas were those of the later days of Edward III, and that he owed his ruin to the extravagant tastes of the school in which he had been reared. There is a curious description in the 'Issue Rolls' of his bed (among his forfeited chattels)

as 'of green Tarteryn embroidered with ships and birds.

P. 209. Ch. VI. The Peasants' Rising of 1381.

The Rebellion in Kent. June 3-5th

In Kent the insurrection began a few days later. The men of power had sent messengers there to arrange supplies, in accordance with the plan of co-operation framed by the 'Great Society'. Whether the message arrived or did not arrive before the Kentish Rising had begun, whether it had any effect or none in hastening the outbreak there, the rebellion along the south shore of the lower Thames was as rapid and powerful as now as on the north. It was on June 5 that Sir John de Berkeley, a knight of the King's household, rode into Greenwich with two of the King's soldiers at his heels.

While Sampson, he came on private business; there was a runaway wife of his settled in the town. The men of the village came together to hear him, and admitted that his claim could not be disputed. In order to save their rights from a return to bondage, they proposed to compound for his freedom. Sampson refused to take less than the enormous sum of 5000s which of course could not be raised. After sharp words had passed, he succeeded in getting the man off to prison in the water castle, for the night. The next day the country began to rise behind his back.

Lives of the Queens of England Strickland

Vol I

P. 135 - Though Adelicia (queen of Henry I of England) had so many children by her second marriage her tender affection for her father's family caused her to send for her younger brother, Joceline of Lowaine, to share her prosperity & happiness; and the munificent earl, her husband (Wm de Albini, Lord of Breckenhorn), to enable this landless prince to marry advantageously, gave him the fair domain of Peterborough, on his wedding day, Agnes, the heiress of the Percies: "since which", says Camden, "the posterity of that Joceline, who took the name of Percy, have ever possessed it — a family certainly very ancient and noble, the male representatives of Charlemagne, more direct than the dukes of Guise who pride themselves on that account. Joceline, in a donation of his which I have seen uses this title: Joceline of Lowaine, brother to queen Adelicia, Castellan of Arundel.

Two ducal peers of England are now representatives of the imperial Saxonian line — namely, the duke of Norfolk, the heir of queen Adelicia; and the duke of Northumberland, the lineal descendant of her brother Joceline of Lowaine.

The two most unfortunate of all the queens of England, Anne Boleyn & Katharine Howard were the lineal descendants of Adelicia by her second marriage with William de Albini. Their children were Wm earl of Arundel, who succeeded to the estate & hon-

P. 113 Imperial descent of Queen Adelicia from Charlemagne.
Descended, through both her parents, from the imperial Carolingian line, Adelicia boasted the most illustrious blood in Christendom. She was the elder daughter of Godfrey of Louvain, duke of Brabant & Lothier (or Lower Lorraine) and Ida countess of Namur. Her father as the great-grandson of Charles, brother to Lothaire of France, was the lawful representative of Charlemagne. The male posterity of the unfortunate Charles having been cut off by Hugh Capet, the rights of his house became vested in the descendants of his eldest daughter, Gerberga. Lambert son of Gerberga, by her marriage with Robert of Louvain, was the father of Godfrey. ~~God~~ Ermengarde, the second daughter of Charles married Albert, the third count of Namur; and their sole daughter and heiress, Ida, (the mother of Adelicia) became the wife of her cousin, Godfrey of Louvain, surnamed Barbatus, or the Bearded, - - - - -

P. 310 Queen Marguerite (second Queen of Edw I) is the ancestress of all our English nobility, bearing the great name of Howard; the honours of his son Thomas Plantagenet, earl marshal (b 1302), were carried into this family, by his descendant, lady Margaret Mowbray, marrying Sir Robert Howard. The Howards, ^{note} through this queen, unit the blood of St. Louis with that of the mightiest of the Plantagenet monarchs. The heiress of her second son, Edmund earl of Kent, married first Sir Thomas Holland, and then Edward the black prince; through her this queen was ancestress of the nobility who bore the name of Holland; which family became active in the wars of the Roses.

Note

Some of the most illustrious characters among English nobility, both as literati & warriors, have belonged to this family. Six distinct branches of the decal family of Howard, descendants of Queen Marguerite and Edw. I., are still extant. Firstly, the Norfolk line, represented by Bernard Edward, duke of Norfolk. Secondly, the elder line of Suffolk and Berkshire, represented by the Hon. Mrs. Grenville Howard, heiress of Little Riving, Leven's Hall, etc. Thirdly, the younger line of Suffolk & Berkshire, represented by Thomas, earl of Suffolk & Berkshire. Fourthly, the Carlisle line, represented by George, earl of Carlisle. Fifthly, the Corby line, ^{whose} representative was Henry Howard, Esq., of Corby Castle, author of the Howard Memoirs. The patriarch of the Carlisle and Corby branches was the celebrated Lord William Howard, surnamed "Salted Will" grandson of the illustrious earl of Surrey, beheaded by Henry VIII. In the lines of Carlisle and Corby, the literary tastes of their renowned ancestor are revived. Sixthly, the Toffingham line, whose representative is Kenneth Alexander, earl of Toffingham, the descendant of the admiral who defeated the invincible Armada.

P. 396 Sir Simon Burley was English ambassador sent to Bohemian court at Prague to arrange for the marriage of Richard II and Anne of Bohemia.

"Sir Simon Burley, a sage and valiant knight, who had been king Richard's tutor, and had been much beloved by the prince of Wales, his father, was deputed to go to Germany, respecting the marriage with the emperor's sister."

P. 401. Note. "From Walsingham, we find that several knights of the household were accused of heresy; from various authorities, we find Sir Simon Burley etc, were more or less accused as disciples of the new doctrine."

P. 402+3. The earl of Ireland wished to divorce his wife and marry a maid-of-honor of Queen Anne. The latter wrote a letter to the Pope for sanction. This offended the nobility and they laid the blame on Sir Simon Burley.

"The storm fell in its fury on the head of the unfortunate Sir Simon Burley, the same knight whom we have seen make two journeys to Prague, in solemn embassy, regarding the queen's marriage. This unfortunate knight who was the most accomplished man of his age, had been foredoomed by his persecutors. The earl of Arundell had previously expressed an opinion to King Richard, that Sir Simon de Burley deserved death.

"Didst thou not say to me in the time of thy parliament, when we were in the bath behind the white-hall, that Sir Simon de Burley deserved to be put to death on several accounts? And didst thou not answer, 'I know no reason why he should suffer death?' and, yet you and your companions traitorously took his life from him!" Such was the accusation by King Richard, when Arundell stood on his trial, to pay the bitter debt of vengeance that Richard had noted against him, as the cause of his tutor's death.

The death of Sir Simon Burley was a bitter sorrow to the queen, perhaps her first sorrow; and it appears that the expenses of her journey from Germany being left unpaid by the government, during the king's minority, ultimately led to the disgrace of her friend, the queen must have considered herself as the innocent cause of his death.

While the executions of Sir Simon Burley and many others of the king's adherents were proceeding in London, Richard and his queen retired to Bristol, & fixed their residence in the castle.

P. 476-7. Queen Johanna (wife of late King Henry IV) was accused of witchcraft. "Joanna's principal accuser was her confessor, John Randolph, a Minorite friar. . . . John Randolph was arrested at the Isle of Guernsey, and sent over to the king in Normandy, where his confessions seem to have determined Henry to proceedings of the utmost rigour, against his royal mother-in-law, who was, as we have said, forthwith arrested, with the suspected members of her household, and committed as a close prisoner, first to the castle of Leeds, one of her own palaces, and afterwards to that of Pevensy. She was by Henry's order, deprived not only of her rich dower lands and tenelements, but of all her money, furniture and personal property, even to her wearing apparel. Her servants were dismissed, and others placed about her by the authority of her governor, Sir John Pileham. These circumstances are all set forth in the following extract from the Parliamentary Rolls for 7th Henry V: —

"Be it remembered that, upon information given to the king, our sovereign lord, as well by the relation and confession of one friar John Randolph, of the order of Friars Minors"

Her perfidious confessor, Randolph, while disputing with the parson of St. Peter's ad Vincula, was forever silenced, by the combative priest stragg-

8 ding him, in the midst of his debate. The fury with which the argument was pursued and its murderous termination, would suggest the idea, that the guilt or innocence of their royal mistresses must have been the subject of discussion. Be this as it may, the death of Randolf, under these circumstances leaves undetailed the "high and horrible means" whereby the royal widow was accused of practising against the life of the king. He was the only witness against her; and by his death, the whole affair remains among the most inscrutable of historical mysteries.

Note. The Chronicle of London, a contemporary, also gives this account:—"Also this same year Freere Randolph, a master of divinity, that some time was the queen's confessor, at the exciting of the said queen, by sorcery and necromancy wrought for to destroy the king; but God wolle, his falseness was at last espied, wherefore by common parlance the queen forfeited her lands."

Burley, Wm (fl 1436), speaker of the House of Commons, was the son of John Burley of Bromsford, high sheriff of Salop in 1404. His father Burley (q.v.) who was beheaded on 5 May 1388, but whose attainder was reversed in the following year, was his great-great-uncle. In 1417 William Burley was first elected a knight of the shire for Salop. In the returns of the next twenty-four parliaments his name is to be found as one of the members of this county no less than eighteen times. The last parliament in which he was returned was that which was summoned to meet at Westminster on 9 July 1455. He was chosen speaker of the House of Commons on 14 March 1436, in place of Sir John Tyrrell, kt., who was compelled by illness to retire from his chair. In the following parliament William Trisham was elected speaker; however, on 26 Feb. 1444 Burley was again voted to the chair, & continued to preside over the house until the dissolution of that parliament.

Little is known of his domestic or political life. In 1426 he inherited the office of sheriff of Salop. He died without male issue, leaving two daughters & co-heiresses, the eldest of whom married, first, Sir Philip Chelwey of Ingeltrie, and, secondly, Sir Thomas Lyletton, the author of "The Tunnys". From this last marriage the present Baron Lyletton and his daughter are descended. His youngest daughter, Elizabeth, married Sir Thomas

Burlley Family.

Sir Thos. Lytelton (or, as his name is usually written, Littleton), the famous author of the Tenures, is stated to have married Joan, dau. & coheir of Wm. B. by Ellen, his wife, the dau. & heiress of John Brendon, of Brendon, co Stafford. This Mr. B., says Bishop Lytelton (in the account of his family printed in Gollin's Peerage edit 1774), "was of the same house as Sir Wm. B., Warden of the Cinque Ports, Constable of Dover Castle (Sir Simon B., K.G., was Constable of Dover Castle, according to Mr. Morris) and Knight of the Garter, temp. Rich. II., whose brother Sir Richard was also Knight of the Garter, as was Sir John B. their father" (Vol VII p. 427).

But in the 3rd vol. of the Topographer & Genealogist (p. 486) is a pedigree of B., contributed by the late well-known Salopian genealogist Mr. Geo. Morris, from which it appears that Joan Littleton was the dau. & coheir of Sir John B. of Bromscroft Castle, sheriff of Shropshire, and the grand-dau. of another Sir John of Bromscroft by Alice, sister & coheir of Walter Pembridge; and that the father of Sir Richard B. K.G., was Sir Roger B. K.G. & not Sir John.

The good Homer, we know, sometimes nods; and it appears to me that Mr. Morris has here left out a generation. The father of Joan Littleton is generally supposed to have been Wm. B. (son of John, who was sheriff in 1404) which Wm. was sheriff in 1426 & speaker of the House of Commons in 1436 & 1443.

The arms set up in the Inner Temple for Sir Thos. Littleton have, surmount, an ascutcheon of pretence of 4 quarters — 1 Burlley, alias Myldre; 2 Burlley, 3 Pembridge 4 Brendon. And the same quarterings occur in the large achievement of Lytelton in Frankley Church, Worc.; only Nash (who is always blundering in his heraldry) attributes the coat of Pembridge (Barry or & az., on a bend gules three mullets arg) to "Gray of Ruthyn", whose arms it slightly resembles. The monument of Sir Thos. Littleton in Worcester Cathedral, also displayed the arms of Myldre alias B., impaling Brendon, & the same arms impaling Gray of Ruthyn (Barry on a bend three mullets); these were destroyed during the civil war.

These quarterings and impalements seem therefore to prove that Joan's mother was a Brendon, her grandmother a Gray of Ruthyn and her great grandmother a Pembridge. But there is some obscurity in the Burlley pedigree which some correspondent of "N+Q" may be able to clear up.

Sir Simon B., K.G., (who according to Mr. Morris, was a son of Sir John B. K.G., and uncle of Sir John, who married the heiress of Pembroke) died without issue & John B. was found to be his cousin (consanguineus) & heir. This John B. was the son & heir of Roger B., by Alice, afterwards married to Sir Richard Arundel, Kt. He married a lady named Margaret, & died in 7 Henry VI (1428) leaving issue a son & heir Wm B. then aged 5, who died without issue in 1516 (should read 1446)

Alice, lady Arundel (whose maiden name has not been discovered) died in 15 Henry VI seized for life of the manor of B., in the co. of Hereford, the reversion of which at her death was in Wm B., the son & heir of her deceased son, John B. She and her husband Arundel had, it seems, obtained from the king a grant of the custody of all the lands which were Roger B.'s, & also all the lands which were Sir Simon B.'s, which were in the king's hands by reason of the minority of the heir. These particulars I take from an article in the Collectanea Topographica et Genealogica Vol VI pp 2, 7, & 19. Were there two Sir Simons? What is known of the coat called Myldre alias B. (argent a lion rampant sa., debreused by a fesse chequy or & arg.)? It appears to have been borne by Joan Littleton's father; but John B., sheriff of Shropshire in 1409, is said to have borne, Vert 3 bears' heads couped arg., in allusion to his name Borely; and a coat resembling Mortimer's was borne by Sir Richard B., K.G., which succeeds Myldre in the misecutcheon on the arms of Littleton. In Dallaway's Heraldry is represented a seal purporting to be that of Sir Simon B., K.G. It had no legend, but the impalements show that it really belonged to his brother Sir Richard, K.G., (or perhaps Sir Richard's wife?) who married according to Mr. Morris, Beatrice, relict of Thos., Lord Ros., & dau. of Ralph, Earl of Stafford. The shield which is heater-shaped, is divided per pale into 3 compartments; the centre exhibits the chevron of Stafford, the dexter the waterbougets of Ros., & the sinister the Mortimer-like coat of Burley. The family held the Manor of Burley under the Mortimers, for which reason probably they adopted a coat resembling that of their ancestors; but "Myldre" is a mystery to me at present. The heraldic dictionaries ascribe it to "Milde of Suffolk", whose heiress I suppose one of the B.'s must have married.

P.S.—I notice that in Burke's Peerage & Armory, the coat of Talbot, quartered by Lord Lyttelton is ascribed to Burley

Burley Family

(4th Series ix 464) (refers to previous article).

I have a few notes of this family, taken from the Public Records, which I forward in the hope that Mr. Graybrook may find them useful in the elucidation of his pedigree

Alice Burley — J. P. M. Alicia Arundel, 15 Henry VI 27 — Reversion of estates to William B., son & heir of said Alice aged 15 + upwards. Alice died Friday after St. Bartholomew anno 14 (Aug 31 1436) (Inq. taken at Webley Nov 1. Anno 15). Alice died Aug 2 last (1436) (Inq. taken at Lidenede Oct 26 anno 15).

Beatrice B. — Pardon to Beatrice Roos of Hamlake for her marriage with Richard de B., Chevalier Aug 20 1385 (Rot. Parl 9 Richard II Part i) — Widow of Maurice Fitz-Maurice, Earl of Desmond; royal assent to her marriage with Thomas brother of William de Ros Jun 1, 1359 (26 32 Edw. III Part 2) — Thomas de Roos of Hamlake + Beatrice his wife Countess of Desmond Sept 4 1359 (26 33 Edw. III Pt 2) — Beatrix Domina de Roos de Hamlake, defuncta Jul 8 1419 (26 7 Henry V) — Dame Beatrix, wife of Sir Richard Beverley, & after (before v.s.) of Thomas Lord Roos (buried) in the chapel of St. John the Baptist (St. Pauls Cathedral) 1409. (Shows Collections Harl. M.S. 544 fol 406). — Died 3 Henry V (Harl M.S. 294 fol 14 — Dan of Earl Stafford (26 1074).

John B. — To John de B. sent upon secret matters of the King 13 £ 6s 8d. Dec 23 (Rot. Ex. Michs 51 E III) — Johan de B. fils Roger, co-syn et heir of Sir Simond de B. Chr Jul 8 1407 (Rot Parl 8 Henry IV Pt 2) — Sir John B or Beverle and Anne his wife (buried) St Erasmus' Chapel (Westminster Abbey) (Harl. M.S. 544 fol 78)

Richard B — John of Gaunt to John de Yerdeburg, Clerk of his Wardrobe: order to send certain articles of Jewellery to him at (qy? Dover; M.S. defective) by the bearer of the missive; but if Yerdeburgh doubt the bearer's carefulness, he must send them by Mons. Ric. de Burley or some other safe messenger. Oct 22 anno 49 (1375) (Register Vol i fol 229) — A hanap with cover of silver given to Mons. Ric. de B. May 6, anno 5 (1382) (26. II 61).

Simon de B. — A silver hanap to Mons. Simon B. Apr 13, anno 47 (1373) (Register of John of Gaunt i 194) — S. de Burleigh, custodian of the Count of St. Pol of France, the King's prisoner 27 Apr. 1379 (Rot Ex., Pasc. 2 Rich. II) — 26 Nov 20 1379 (26 Michs). — Sent from the King to the King of the Romans + Bohemia, on certain arduous & secret negotiations touching the Lord King (about his marriage with Anne of Bohemia) June 15 (26. Pasc. 3 Rich II) — S. de B. lieutenant of Hugh Fastolf, constable of Dover Jul 13 1384 (26. Pasc. 8 Rich II) — S. de B. Kt., custodian of the King's castle of Dover, May 1, 1385 + Dec 21 (26 + Michs 9 Rich II).

From the manner in which their names are mentioned there can be little doubt that both Richard & Simon were in the service of John de Gaunt.

Hermentrude.

Allow me to correct two errors in my note on p. 464. For "1516" read 1446 (24 Henry VI); & for "15 Henry VII" read 14 Henry VI.

The post-mortem inquest on Alice Arundel was taken in the 15th of Henry VI but she died on Thursday after the feast of St. Bartholomew in the 14th of that reign.

Queries.

Who was the Wife of Judge Littleton?

Who was the wife of the great Judge Littleton & the ancestress of so many distinguished families? Mr. Sydney Grazebrook on pp 93 & 240 of his Heraldry of Worcestershire puts forth contradictory statements.

1. Under "Burlley" she is called "Joan dau. & coheir of W^m B of Bromscroft, High Sheriff of Salop 1426, granddaun. of John B., High Sheriff in 1409.
2. Under "Grey" she appears as the dau. of Sir John B. & grand dau of Sir John & Alice Pembroke, his wife.
3. In the Herald and Genealogist Vol. i p 437, to which Mr. Sydney Grazebrook refers, she is called, "Joan widow of Sir Philip Chelwynd, of Ingestre, dau. & coheir of W^m B. etc, by Ellen dau. & heir of John Brendon of Brendon in Staffs"; and her grandfather is called John B. Her mother Miss Brendon is similarly described by Mr. Grazebrook.
4. In Westcote's Views of Devonshire, p. 621, she becomes "Joan, dau. & coheir of Sir John B. of Bromscroft, in Salop, Knt, & of his wife dau. of Richard, Lord Grey of Wilton".
5. This last agrees with a M.S. in Cambr College Library Cambridge Wigorn Pedigrees, mostly to 1569.

6. In the Topographer & Genealogist vol. iii p. 486, there is a pedigree, being notes by Jos. Morris on the Thynne alias Botterville, pedigree
 Sir John B. of Bromscroft Castle, = Alice Pembroke
 Knt. Will dated 1415

The following is the pedigree referred to above, Dr. George B., being shown where indicated, viz. as son of John B. & Mary Jackson. It was probably through relatives of his mother's he may have met with his wife in co. Tipperary, for a family of Jacksons of Rapla, near Nenagh, existed in that day in co. Tipperary, as well, also the Kingsleys who resided also near Nenagh, and one of whom he subsequently married. His being a son of John B. seems strengthened by the fact that his eldest son was so christened.

The truth seems to be, that the King was weak, with a strong desire for despotic power; his uncle, imperious and factious. Amongst them all, Sir Simon was brought to the block, May 5th 1388; and in the same year, the Archbishop of Canterbury had a grant of the parks of Langley and Elmhurst in Kent, which accrued to the Crown by virtue of his attainder. The judgment against him was reversed in the following reign — a fair presumption, says Mr. Hallam, of its injustice. Sir Simon's brother, John, was also a knight of the Garter and, besides his eldest son, William, who was seated at Burley, had two other sons Richard, an eminent man in his day, K.G., marshal of the field, and privy counsellor to John of Gaunt, whom he accompanied to Spain, and died there the same year his uncle was beheaded; and Sir Roger, father of John Burley of Bromcroft Castle, Sheriff of Salop in 1409, whose daughter, Joyce, became the wife of John de Gatacre, of Gatacre.

His son William Burley, of Bromcroft, sheriff in 1426, M.P. for Salop and speaker of the House of Commons, left two daughters, his heirs, Joan, married first to Sir Philip Chetwynd of Ingestre and secondly, to Sir Thomas Lyttelton, the celebrated author of the "Tenuers".

Elizabeth married to Thomas Brussel, of Billesley, in Warwickshire.

Jane Burleigh, dau. of Sir John Burleigh, Knt., of Bromcroft, co Salop, married Thomas Corbet, Esq., of Leigh, otherwise Leighton in Walcheria, being one of the confines of Powis land, in the Marches of Wales.

Joan, dau. & coheirs of Sir W^m Burley, Knt. of Bromcroft Castle in Shropshire and widow of Sir Philip Chetwynd of Ingestre, co. Stafford married Sir Thomas Lyttelton.

Jocosa dau. of Sir John Burley married John Gatacre of Gatacre.

Vol IV.

— Burley married Margaret, dau. of Thos. Longe of Semington in parish of Steeple Ashton, Wilts (Her brother died 1529 another in 1535. Her father in 1509 had his will proved).

Elizabeth, dau. & coheir of Sir John B. by Alice dau. & heiress of Walter Pembroke, married Sir John Hopton, Kt., of Hopton le Salop.

de B., esteemed one of the most accomplished men of his age, and as such appointed governor of the young prince afterwards King Richard II. Sir Simon de B., and his two brothers, Sir Richard and Sir John, "men of worth and valour" are mentioned amongst the officers despatched by the Black Prince in 1366 to escort Don Pedro the cruel, the deposed King of Castile, from his asylum at Corunna to Bordeaux. He is also mentioned, on the same authority as one of the gallant cavaliers who volunteered their services to accompany Sir Thomas Felton on his adventurous exploit to gain intelligence in the enemies' quarters, which terminated in the death or captivity of them all. Sir Simon must have been of the number of those ^{made} ~~taken~~ prisoners on this occasion, so characteristic of the chivalrous spirit of the age. He was a younger son, and therefore what the historian, Knighton, says, that his patrimony did not exceed twenty marks, may possibly have been true, as the family estates were enjoyed by his elder brother; but, by the favour of his sovereign, wealth and honours were lavishly poured upon him. In the first year of Richard II, being already a knight, he was appointed keeper of Windsor Castle for life. In the next year, Launceston castle was confirmed to him. In 1380 Simon de B., Chamberlain, was one of the King's Commissioners to treat with the German Princes. In 1382, when he is styled Under-Chamberlain of the King, he was constituted master of the falcons, and keeper of the royal menagerie at Charing, with a fee of eleven pence a day, and received grants of the manor of Parrock, in Kent, and castle Emlyn in Kermerdin; next year, of Leyborne castle in Kent, late Juliana's de Leyborne; and the year after, that of liberties at his castle of Lennalx, in Herefordshire. In 1385 he was one of the executors of Joan, Princess of Wales, the King's mother. In 1386, he had a grant of Castle Frome in the same county, forfeited by the felony of Lady Deveres. He was also Warden of the Cinque Ports, constable of Dover castle, privy counsellor, knight banneret, and knight of the Garter.

In so turbulent a reign as that in which Sir Simon de B. flourished, he could not be neutral, or hope to escape uninjured. Walsingham represents him and Richard ~~Styng~~ Styng as two of those who prejudiced the King against the Earl of Arundel, but Walsingham writes with a manifest leaning to the "Opposition". On the other hand, Carte, the perpetual advocate of the legitimate sovereign, represents him as a victim to his affection for the king and attachment to the constitution.

Family of Burley (in connection with Gatacre of Gatacre in Salop).

The Burleys, who formerly wrote themselves Boerley, derive the name from Burley, in Herefordshire, which they held under their ~~superior~~ lords, the Mortimers, and made a considerable figure for several generations. Walter B., one of the first fellows of Merton College, was a younger son or grandson of Sir Simon de Burlega, knight, who appears a subscribing witness to a deed of Ralph de Mortimer, who died in 1247.
In an age when learned men prided themselves upon abstruseness and subtilty, Walter B. obtained the honourable appellation of the plain and the perspicuous Doctor — qualities which eminently fitted him for the instruction of youth, and procured for him the important office of preceptor to the Prince of Wales, afterward Edward III, wherein he conducted himself so meritoriously, that the King selected him to superintend the education of his son, the Black Prince.
This probably enabled him to introduce at court his relation, another Sir Simon

Burley of Bromscroft castle Salop

Argent, a lion rampant sable debreised with a fesse counter-componée or and azure (Nash's History of Worcestershire).

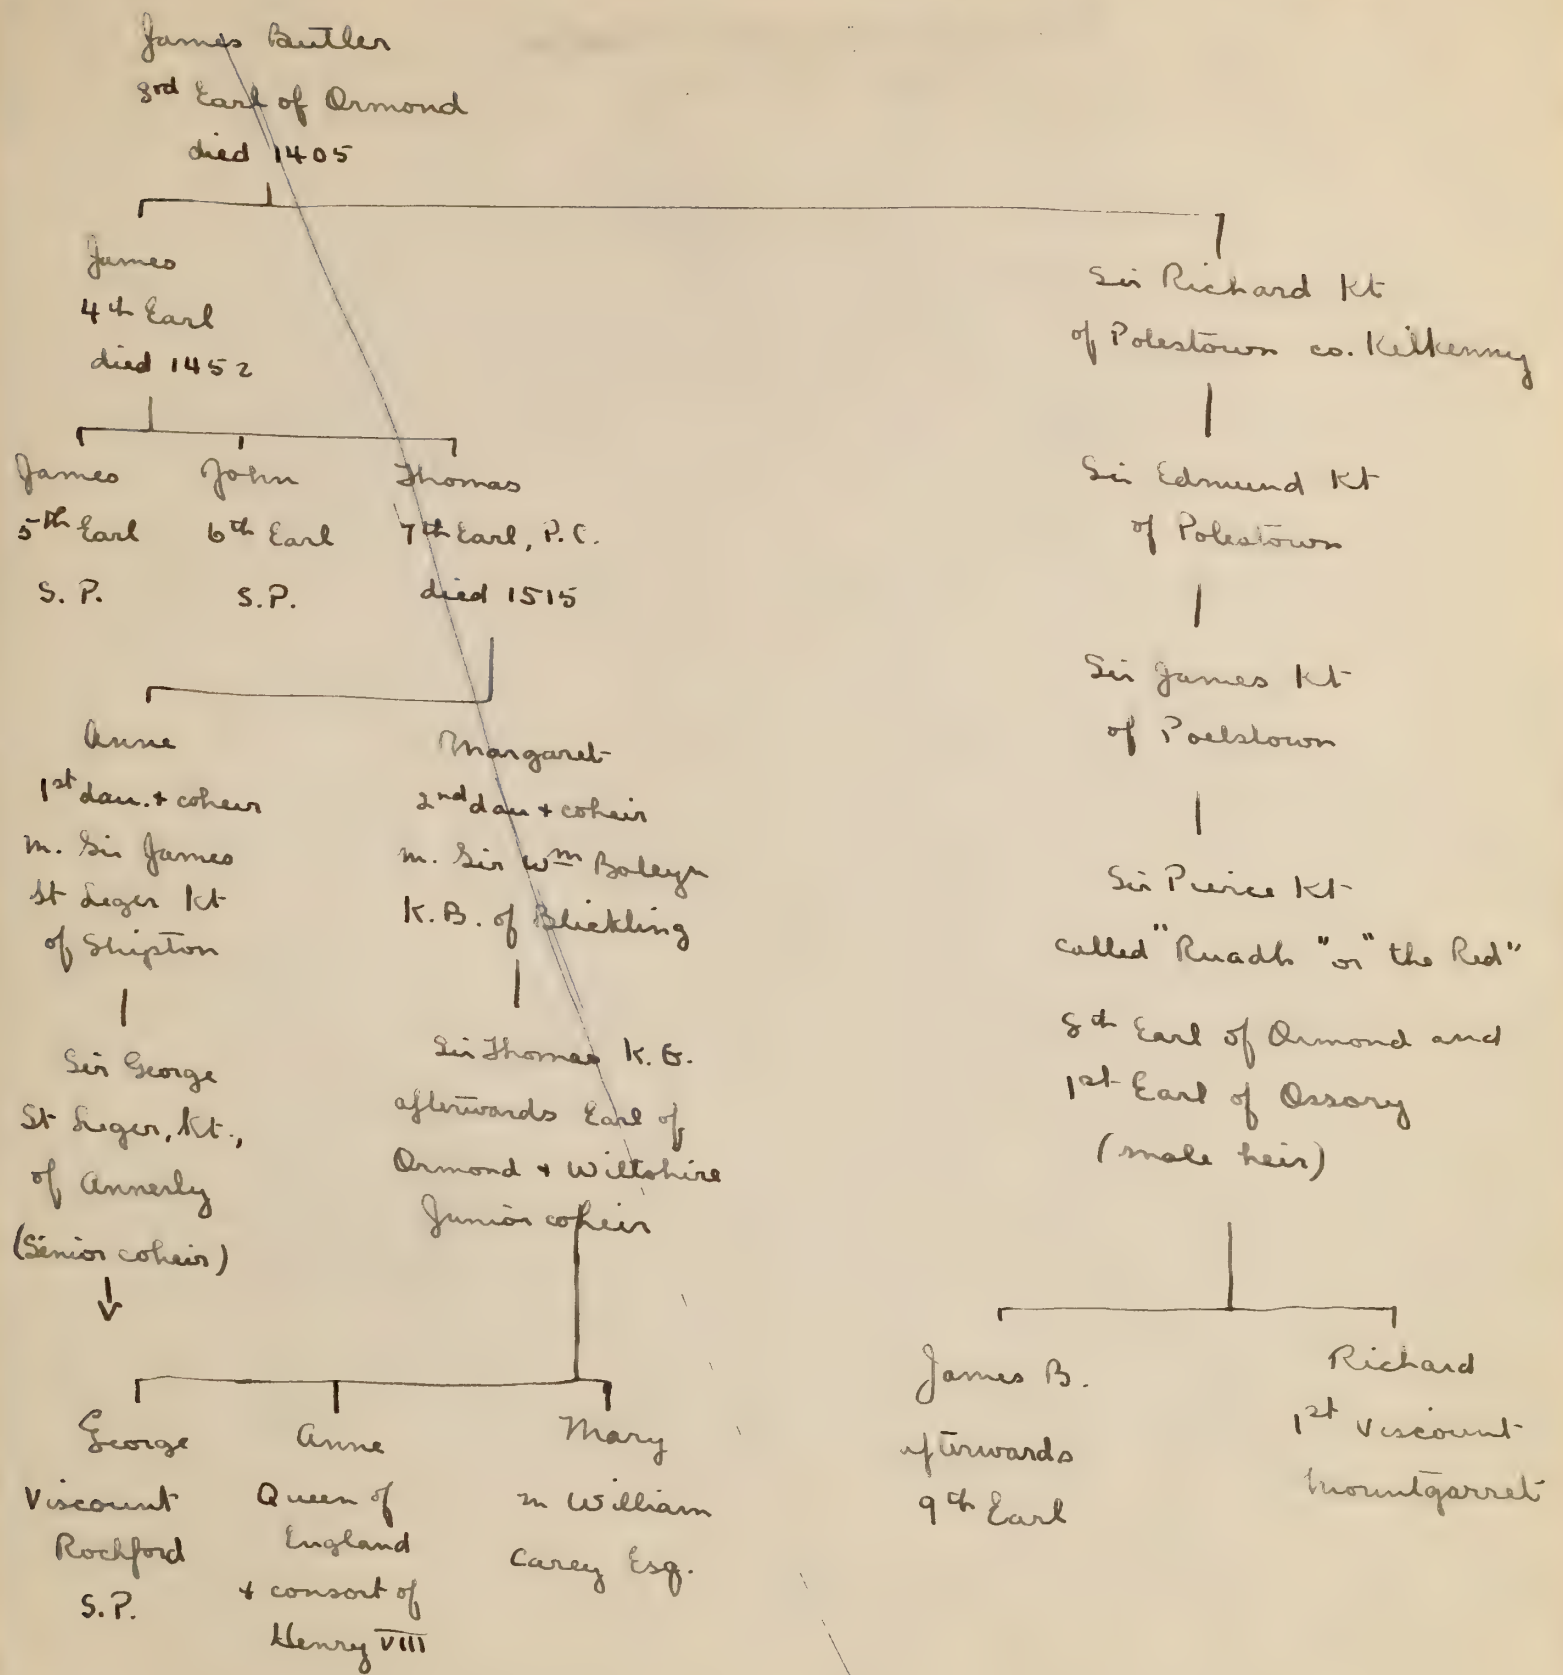

Thomas Lyttelton (or Littleton, as his name is usually written) the learned author of the Tenures, married Joan, dau. & coheir of W^m Burley of Bromscroft. In Edmondson's Baronagium, among the hundred & twenty two coats quartered by Lyttelton is that of Mythe alias Burley, as above; and the same coat also occurs among the Lyttelton quarterings at Frankley. William Burley, who was High Sheriff of Shropshire in 1426, & subsequently Speaker of the House of Commons, bore these arms, but his father John Burley, High Sheriff for the same county in 1409, bore Vert, three boars' heads coupéd close argent, in allusion to his name, Burley. An earlier coat, resembling that of Mortimer (viz. - Barry of six sable & or, on a chief of the second two pallets of the first, an inescutcheon ermine charged with three bars gules) was borne by Sir Simon Burley, Sir Richard Burley and Sir John Burley all at one time Knights of the garter (see the Herald & Genealogist vol I p. 431).

Udefyn

Ermine three barulets gules (N).

This is an inescutcheon upon the arms of Burley as borne by Sir John Burley and his two sons, Sir John & Sir Simon, all at the same time Knights of the Garter. Dr. Thomas, in his survey of Worcester Cathedral, supposes it to be a distinct coat, and ascribes it to Udefyn; hence it appears in Nash's list. But as the arms of Burley are almost identical with those of Mortimer, which family also bore an inescutcheon (see Mortimer), it is very improbable that Burley's inescutcheon was a separate coat. The Burleys held Burley in the county of Hereford, under the Mortimers, for which reason, probably, they assumed a coat resembling their superior lords. Guillim likewise supposes this inescutcheon to be a distinct coat, but attributes it to Hussey and says that it was so borne by Sir Simon Burley, in the time of Richard the Second.

There are no military records in this Department of a date prior to the War of the Revolution. Such colonial records as are in existence, except those in the possession of the British Government, are most likely to be found in the custody of the various states that sent troops to those wars, or, in some instances, of historical societies.

For information relative to British troops, inquiry should be addressed to the Keeper of the Rolls, Public Records Office, Rolls House, Chancery Lane, London, England.

1. The first part of the document is a list of names and dates, which appears to be a record of some kind. The names are written in a cursive script, and the dates are written in a more formal, printed style. The list is organized into two columns, with names on the left and dates on the right.

2. The second part of the document is a series of handwritten notes or entries. These are written in a cursive script and are organized into a list format. Each entry consists of a number followed by a name and a date. The numbers are written in a small, handwritten style, and the names and dates are written in a larger, cursive script.

3. The third part of the document is a series of handwritten notes or entries. These are written in a cursive script and are organized into a list format. Each entry consists of a number followed by a name and a date. The numbers are written in a small, handwritten style, and the names and dates are written in a larger, cursive script.

4. The fourth part of the document is a series of handwritten notes or entries. These are written in a cursive script and are organized into a list format. Each entry consists of a number followed by a name and a date. The numbers are written in a small, handwritten style, and the names and dates are written in a larger, cursive script.

5. The fifth part of the document is a series of handwritten notes or entries. These are written in a cursive script and are organized into a list format. Each entry consists of a number followed by a name and a date. The numbers are written in a small, handwritten style, and the names and dates are written in a larger, cursive script.

The first of these is the fact that the number of people who are interested in the subject of the book is increasing rapidly. This is due to the fact that the book is written in a simple and easy-to-understand manner, and it contains many interesting facts and figures.

Dear Sir,

Very much surprised and so glad to hear from you. The only Burlings I have ever found but know in the same Burling family whose address I believe is St. Catharines, they live just one mile south of McRae.

So you are juggling B.
diphtheria, will don't get too sympathetic with the creatures they have a nasty trick.

Good luck to you Herb Jim.

Princes of Wales.

Edward of Woodstock - The Black Prince.
P. 32 born June 15, 1330.

The early education of the young Prince was entrusted to Dr. Walter Buryll, in company with some "whipping-boys" of less exalted rank. Tradition has it that he proceeded to Oxen's College, Oxford, where one day he had a quarrel with a fellow-student named Hampden over a game of tennis. Hampden struck the Prince with his racket, & as a penalty, had to forfeit "Tung, Wing & wambow, three manors for a blow." This does not sound a very likely story, for Edward was a lively youth & no bad hand at returning a blow. He excelled in all outdoor sports and the games & tournaments which were got up for his amusement & instruction is the use of arms.

While the Prince was studying his primer with young Simon de Burley & tilting with his youthful companions in arms, his father was often away in Flanders, establishing his ~~own~~ country's commercial prosperity.
